not to be rude but,,, please, don't being lgbtq+ isn't inappropriate, at least to most people. reporting posts and calling them inappropriate if they contain lgbt material might make the lgbt community on the forums feel invalidated, which, fun fact, includes myself. if it was inappropriate and we couldn't talk about lgbt, the mods would've said something by now. age or upbringing is barely an excuse, in my opinion; i live in a town where i'm constantly surrounded by people who act downright homophobic. yet here i am, a member of the lgbt community.

being lgbt is not inappropriate. it's natural and could happen to you as easily as it could happen to anyone else. imagine if you were an lgbt person venting about how they felt at school or something because of your sexuality, and then someone reported your post because it contained lgbt. it makes the original poster feel like you don't care about their issues just because they're not straight. if that person was straight yet had the same issues, would you report the post? probably not.

i deeply apologize if this message came off as hurtful; i just wished to inform you of this. you don't have to follow what i told you. maybe i'm just coming off as a social justice warrior with this message (no, i probably am). just,,, please, be considerate of other people.

Sometimes LGBT posts can make others uncomfortable. Yes, I mostly agree with you, but let's all try to be more considerate of other people. We shouldn't go as far as reporting people for this matter though.

Uhm, imo, it shouldn't go far at all. I'm Catholic, so I understand that people may not agree with it, but we here aren't saying that we're uncomfortable with your religion.

every single one of you has feeling

so shut up

you arguing = hurt feeling hurt feeling = more arguing more arguing= home hurt feeling more hurt feeling = bad

you = good

they = good

so dont make people feel (or feel the need to feel) unhappy or not themselves

let them be themselves

For some reason there seems to be a stereotype that people who are uncomfortable with lgbt people, are horrible people. People who do not support lgbt, are normal people with just an opinion. Let them be themselves. We need to respect other people and their opinions. That is all I am saying. I am not homophobic. I don't think lgbt and religion are rivals. There are just some religions that don't support lgbt.
